Product overview

We've all been there: you're deeply immersed in that movie you've been looking forward to all year, lost in the climactic action scenes and brilliant graphics, and then…

Uh-oh. You have to pee.

You shouldn't have to miss the best parts of the movie. That's where RunPee comes in—the app that sends alerts and gives you the best times for a bathroom break. The app also comes with fun features to entertain you before the movie starts, user polls and movie reviews, and synopses of the first three minutes in case you show up late. No matter what obstacles come between you and your movie, RunPee has got your back. And your bladder.

Features

RunPee showcases a number of helpful and entertaining features for the dedicated movie-goer:

Peetimes

The most important feature of them all. Peetimes are the best windows of time in the movie for a bathroom break. Peetimes are carefully mapped out to keep you from missing the most exciting parts of the movie. Usually, they last about four minutes.
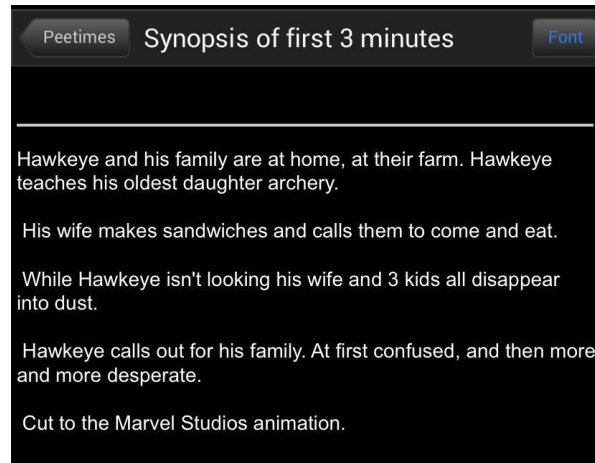

There are three kinds of Peetimes:
- Recommended: This is the best time to go to the bathroom—the least significant scene in the film. If you have to go, go now.
- Emergency: These are for those moments where you can't afford to wait until the recommended Peetime. Go now to avoid accidents.
- Alert: These special Peetimes indicate upcoming "extreme" scenes—for example, those that are ultra-violent or feature extreme cruelty to humans or animals. If you are sensitive to that kind of content, this is the Peetime for you.

With each Peetime, you get a Peetime cue—a line in the movie that signals the beginning of your bathroom break. When you hear that line, it's time to go.
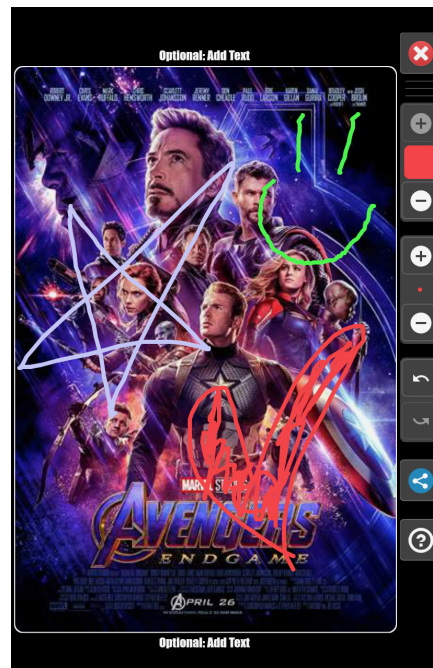

Running late?

If you missed the beginning of the movie, don't panic—RunPee has got you covered with a prepared synopsis of the first three minutes of the movie. It'll be like you've been there the whole time.
